Energy efficiency...
 The energy efficiency class (EEC) is a measure of the energy consumption of an appliance. It is expressed as a letter from A to G, with A being the most efficient and G the least. The energy efficiency class is determined by the energy consumption of the appliance in kWh per year. The energy consumption of an appliance is determined by the energy consumption of the appliance in kWh per year. The energy consumption of an appliance is determined by the energy consumption of the appliance in kWh per year.

design & cooking convenience

Safety, our highest priority

Safety is paramount in all of our products, and where boiling water is involved it is even more crucial. All of our boiling water taps are equipped with a child safety feature using a recoil spring in the push-turn knob. This prevents unintentional or unguarded use of the boiling water tap, the recoil spring immediately stops the water jet when the button is released. In addition, the design of the outflow keeps the temperature on the outside of the spout at a safe level, the water jet is very compact, in order to reduce splashing to a minimum.
